eMi² Interns

pursuing God

serving the poor

designing a world of hope

An eMi² internship gives you a unique opportunity to further your technical design skills, while seeking God and serving the poor. The program challenges you to excel in design, service, leadership and spiritual maturity. Your 3-6 month internship requires you to travel with a design team on a project trip within India or elsewhere in southern Asia. The team goals set during your project trip direct your design work throughout your stay in the eMi² office. Opportunities in the office will take you from poor villages and intern bonding treks into the intricacy and creativity of design. The fellowship of prayer and mentoring relationships, combined with after-hours fun will produce life-long friendships with other interns and staff. Your time in stillness, pursuing God, will take you into maturity and a future limited only by Him.

Design projects drive an intern's technical design experience at eMi². Together with a staff project leader, interns team up with experienced professionals, travel to a project site, and serve the poor by designing orphanages, schools, vocational training centers, hospitals, and more. They work on survey teams, calculate beam depths, sketch master plans, and design water systems. They pray for villagers in the hospital, and play with the kids in the orphanage. Interns seek to serve those in need with all they have and all they are.

I press on that I may lay hold of that for which Christ Jesus has also laid hold of me. Philippians 3:12
